Wasatch Park Road Honors Heber Man

The first road constructed in the new Wasatch Mountain State Park has been named for the late Clay Cummings of Heber City.

Mr. Cummings died recently of a heart attack. He was the first superintendent of the park, had chairmanned a Heber Valley citizens committee which worked to formulate the park, and was for many years a county and city commissioner in Heber Valley.

The roadway was officially dedicated Thursday morning as the Cummings Parkway by Utah Park and Recreation officials and representatives of the State Road Commission and highway department.

The new roadway was built under the supervision of the State Highway Department. It is presently rough graded, and adequate for trucks and jeeps, and is about 5 miles long.

The road will be accessible from Snake Creek Canyon and Pole Line Pass road on the north, and from the south from the Deer Creek Ridge Road.

Mrs. H. Clay Cummings, Harold Fabian of the Park Commission, and C. Taylor Burton, State Highway Director, officiated at ribbon-cutting ceremonies. Other state and Wasatch County officials were present for the opening of the road.
